

If I were to ask you to predict which card would be chosen from 4 alternatives, chances are pretty good that you would be unable to correctly pinpoint which card would be selected. However, there is a reasonable chance that your body may have a physiological reaction which can then be used to predict which card would be chosen. The physiological reaction would occur anywhere up to 10 seconds before a conscious choice to select a card is made and the reaction is typically outside of conscious awareness. These cues are minimal physiological signals that are typically detected by the subconscious mind.

Freudian Slips and Young

How your mind, under stress, gets better at processing bad news